children of all age groups and drawing abilities who focus on the built environment, appreciate architecture and associated landscapes, and creatively express their perceptions.

“The annual Design Awards Program celebrates buildings created by architects within our region. The collective selection of projects not only acknowledges those responsible for the work but also represents the values that are important to us as a community — values like exemplary design, sustainability, function and beauty,” said Matthew Beausoleil, 2020 president of the Santa Barbara AIA.

Entries were submitted in the following categories: Commercial Buildings; Single Family Residential; Mixed Use and Multifamily Residential; Historic Preservation, Restoration, Rehabilitation or Reconstruction; Santa Barbara Architectural Heritage; Small Projects; Single Family Residential Additions, Remodels or Accessory Dwelling Units (ADUs); Commercial Interiors; Residential Interiors and Proposed/Unbuilt Projects.

“A select jury of three distinguished architects considered three levels of recognition for the submitted projects — Honor, Merit and Honorable Mention,” said Mr. Beausoleil. “Of the submitted designs, the judges awarded eight projects with Honor designation, nine with Merit and seven with Honorable Mention.”

This year’s judges were Christopher Hawthorne, chief design officer for the city of Los Angeles; Margot MacDonald, architecture department head at Cal Poly in San Luis Obispo; and John Margolis, senior project manager for Appleton Partners

LLP Architects. “The variety of award-winning projects offers the public a chance to experience buildings that aren’t always accessible. It is my hope that people discover or find something new for themselves after reviewing this year’s recipients,” said Mr. Beausoleil.
